Prayers and Reflections for February

What is original sin?

One day an engineer (a good engineer) gave me the most beautiful definition of original sin that I have so far heard—or, shall we say, a very appealing and simple one. From his engineering experience, he knows that for every gadget you need an instruction manual. If I fail to follow the instructions in the manual, then I cannot complain if the piece of equipment doesn't work. This engineer put it to me that original sin, or, to put it more precisely, the first sin of our ancestors, was the refusal to follow the instruction manual. God has given us a human nature; we are creatures, and written within our creaturely nature, so to speak, are the correct instructions. If we then use ourselves differently, then we have no right to blame God if things do not work. Original sin is the refusal to accept our creaturely nature.....
